

Singer, the young college lad that is trying out for an infield job with the A. Giants, has shown himself to be a mighty nifty fielder, also a pretty wise chap on general baseball maneuvers. The lad's throwing arm loses much of its caste when pitted against the men that have been assembled here, especially on the infield, as "Rube" has the greatest bunch of fingers on the inner works to be found outside the big show.

Chicago Defender, Chicago, IL

Saturday, April 24, 1920, Page 9, Column 1