

CHICAGO GIANTS WIN

Omaha, Neb., July 9.—Joe Green's Chicago Giants blew into this city and took the local champions into camp for the first game of a four game series. The representative of the new league of baseball teams of color had just finished a series at Kansas City, where they were in two ten inning games, losing by the narrow margin of 1 to 0. Big Taylor, the Giant pitcher, undoubtedly is one of the classiest performers that has shown here this season, while another Giant hurler in the person of Davis displayed streaks that should point to him as a most formidable slabman. Beckwith, the lad who wields the willow among the Race teams much after the fashion of Babe Ruth, was right up to the standard, and advance reports had him making life miserable for all heavens en route. The visitors downed the locals 8 to 4, taking the lead in the fourth inning, and were never headed.

Chicago Defender, Chicago, IL

Saturday, July 10, 1920, Page 9, Column 3