

CIRCUIT OPENING

Many notables in the sport world attended, the opening games of the western circuit of the proposed baseball league. The first games were played at Indianapolis, Ind. Ira Lewis, sporting editor of the Pittsburg Courier, came all the way from the Smoky City to be present. Lewis is running some mighty good baseball stuff in the new magazine, The Competitor. Dave Wyatt of the Chicago Defender showed up, as did "Big" Smith, Ed. Lancaster of Louisville, and baseball men from New Orleans and other southern league cities. "Wood" Knox of the Freeman chaperoned the gang and they had a rousing good time and incidentally enjoyed the opening games of the new circuit, yelling themselves hoarse as Taylor's team walked off with the lion's share of the honors.

Chicago Defender, Chicago, IL

Saturday, May 8, 1920, Page 9, Column 3