

ROYAL GIANTS HERE TOMORROW

If the play-off of the postponed game between the champion colored Royal Giants, of Brooklyn, and the Perth Amboy Pacers is continued in the same lively manner tomorrow as the game was started last Saturday, there should be some high class baseball at Amusement Park.

There is bound to be some heavy hitting, as the Royals will not be content unless they knock the ball over one of the fences, and they are the kind of players who are famed for such tricks. However, if the pitching is of the same calibre as was seen last Saturday, the colored gentlemen will find the fences farther away than they think.

It is not likely that Sheaffer, the star left hander of the club will pitch against the Royals. If Sheaffer was to work he could be depended upon to hold the Royals down to the minimum. Sheaffer is being groomed along to work against the Athletics on Sunday and he will not be pushed much during the week.

Ross, Simpson and Robedee will be given the acid test against the Royals. These three pitchers are fighting for places on the Pacers pitching staff and they will be called upon to show their best at this time. Applegate is also due for light work after his hard nine-inning game against the St. Anthony's last Sunday. "Appy" is believed to have overworked himself in the daily practice sessions and rather than sacrifice him in any of the coming exhibition games, Ganley will probably nurse him along until it comes time for the league games.

Manager Ganley is anxious to win as many of the exhibition games as possible, but he would rather give a promising pitcher a trial in an exhibition game and lose that game, than wait until the league season opens to try out the material on hand. When the Atlantic League season opens on Wednesday, May 20, there won't be so many chances taken and there will be a good reason why a game is won or lost after that date.

There should be plenty of humor and funny antics in the game tomorrow with the Royals. When the tussle was abruptly terminated last week, the Royals were just beginning to warm up and the fun was commencing. As the rain broke down in torrents the 'stubby' second baseman emitted yells similar to a boy in swimming. The coaching of the Royals on the baselines will be a unique feature of tomorrow's game.

"Doc" Scanlon, who beat the Pacers on Sunday is loud in his praise of the Perth Amboy team and he says the people of this city do not realize how good of a team they have. Scanlon picks the Pacers for the first division and says they will finish third or better.

The former Brooklyn pitcher was impressed with Shankey's position at the bat. "Doc" says that Shankey picks out good balls to hit at, making the opposing pitcher put the ball over the plate before he will swing. And when Shankey swings Scanlon says he is a sure hitter. Clark, the second sacker, also made a hit with Scanlon, as did outfielder Meara. Scanlon admitted that he had pitched one of the best games in his career, a game equally as good as any game he had ever pitched in the National League.

Outfielder Mulvey, of the Bridgeport club of the Eastern Association, is expected to report to Manager Ganley tomorrow and he will probably be rushed into the game. If Mulvey plays as well as Clark, who was sent from the Eastern Association, there will be no kick coming.

John Fullerton, the local boy, who has been trying for short will probably be given a chance in tomorrow's game against the Royals. Fullerton is improving with each day's play and Ganley thinks he will develop into a first-class player.
