

---

The "Trambean" Man.—There is no combination on earth which fits so perfectly as that of a darkey and a slide-trombone. There were two such combinations with the Tennessee Rats, the colored ball team who played on the East side yesterday. The combination of a ball team and band is novel and these boys had the drawing power. As we were about to say—they had two trombonists—great, big, strapping fellows—and the way they shattered the air was something "scanless." They shot great gobs of noise in every direction; splattered it over the pavement and adjoining buildings; tore off yards and yards of it; flung it to the breeze and wrapped it around the lamp posts and flag poles; they split window panes, un-honked automobiles and almost smothered the crowd which had accumulated. But the crowd liked it and couldn't resist following them across to Pickett park. As we said before—the combination is ideal for effect—that is, some kinds.

---

The Evening Times, Grand Forks, ND

Monday, June 24, 1912, Page 10, Column 1