

TIN CAN IS CHASING 'EM

Rain Gives Bone Chance to Fire Excess Baggage.

The rain saved somebody a beating at baseball yesterday, and whether that somebody would have been Manager Bone's recruits or the Brooklyn Royal Giants will have to remain a matter of debate as the Giants have a busy few weeks ahead of them and are unable to arrange another date with the locals.

Pop Anson's Colts have an open date Monday and there may be something doing for the fans if Manager Bone can make connections.

But the weather didn't put any damper on the regular spring game of "Can, can, who's got the can?"

Nealon, a young outfielder from Brooklyn, was the first one to find it tagging along behind him, and he beat it for the land of trolley dodging right away. One less smiling face above Cameron's mahogany, near or real, just as you want it.

One O'Donnell from Westerly, who surprised himself more than anyone else by getting a home run Tuesday, was suspected of having the can hid about his person somewhere, but at last accounts both he and the can were missing and if he'll please stay away himself and return the can the manager will be satisfied. Fogler, a catcher, also helped swell the railroad receipts yesterday by buying a ticket for Brooklyn.

Ambos, a Colorado shortstop, and Doll, a pitcher from Chicago, were among the arrivals yesterday.

Weather permitting there will be the usual morning and afternoon practice for the remainder of the week with games with teams organized among the candidates.
