

ST. LOUIS GIANTS PRIMED

Training reports from the St. Louis Giants of the new league, reveal that Mills has been quietly whipping into condition a team that is certain to jump right out and give the best in the league a tough tussle for front runner honors. Mills expects to set the pace, and he has signed a sufficient number of players to carry him through a grueling campaign without fear of injuries to the regulars playing havoc with his team's chances of annexing the big prize. Captain Wallace is in excellent form to start the race, and he has his charges going through a daily grind which is especially satisfactory to the owners. The Mound City crowd not only expect to have a team that will win, but they are willing to wager that they will outdraw any club in the league. Extensive plans for the accommodation of the patrons are well under headway; the stands will have a fresh coat of paint, new and pleasant features will be added to the box seat section, and generally speaking, the owners, who just a few months ago incorporated, intend to develop their plant into one of the most elaborate baseball structures that can be found in modern league operation. The park at 60th and Broadway is but 20 minutes' ride from the main spur of the city, and as the Mound City folks go week days just about as strong as they do Sunday in other cities, we opine that the St. Louis crowd is going to be of some power in the organization, both on the field and at the box office.

Chicago Defender, Chicago, IL

Saturday, April 10, 1920, Page 11, Column 5